Women's Studies Course Descriptions

Fall 2010

WOMST 105 Introduction to Women's Studies

Section A: MWF 11:30; Section B: MWF 10:30--V. Carroll

A broad overview of Women's Studies as a discipline—an interdisciplinary area of study drawing from a variety of other disciplines including history, sociology, psychology, art, literature, and philosophy among others. Topics will include history and theory of women and women's studies, issues concerning women and how race, ethnicity, class and sexuality intersect with gender.

WOMST 105 Introduction to Women's Studies

Section C: MWF 12:30; Section D 1:30--G. Sabates

In this Introduction to Women's Studies course we will examine the history of feminism and gender roles in the United States, the ways in which feminists have analyzed and changed women's position in society, we will study institutions and issues that currently affect women. This course aims to sharpen student's critical awareness of how gender operates in institutional and cultural contexts as well as in their own lives; you will learn how to analyze society through a "gendered" lens.

WOMST 105 Introduction to Women's Studies

Section E: TU 9:30--M. Chance-Reay

Introduction to Women's Studies is an interdisciplinary examination of the experiences of women, the ways in which gender inequality operates in society, and strategies by which we can develop a more inclusive society. We will also examine the history of feminism in the United States and ways in which feminists have analyzed women's positions in society and sought to change it. We will study institutions and issues currently affecting women.

WOMST 105 Introduction to Women's Studies

Section F: MWF 9:30--J. Abrams

An interdisciplinary introduction to academic and community-based thinking about women's lives: (1) how gender inequality in society restricts women's development, limits their contributions to the dominant culture, and subjects women to systematic violence and (2) strategies with which women can gain power within existing institutions and develop new models of social relations. Particular attention will be paid to issues of race, ethnicity, class, and sexuality.

WOMST 105 Introduction to Women's Studies

Section G: MWF 8:30; Section ZA: Distance--J. Hockett

Introduction to Women's Studies is an interdisciplinary examination of the experiences of women, the ways in which gender inequality operates in society, and the strategies by which we can develop a more inclusive society. This course will also examine the history of feminism in the United States and the ways in which feminists have analyzed women's position in society and have sought to change it. We will study institutions and issues that currently affect women.

WOMST 105 Introduction to Women's Studies

Section H: TU 8:05; Section I: TU 2:30--S. Gadgil

This course explores gender inequality and feminist social change through an examination of personal writings, key topics in Women's Studies, and social and historical processes of change. Students are introduced to the Women's Studies Program, which provides courses in many areas, including the feminist analysis of literature and culture, global feminist analysis and feminist service learning and social change

WOMST 105 Introduction to Women's Studies

Section ZB: MW 5:30; Section ZC: TU 5:30--J. Pearson

An interdisciplinary introduction to academic and community-based thinking about women's lives: (1) how gender inequality in society restricts women's development, limits their contributions to the dominant culture, and subjects women to systematic violence and (2) strategies with which women can gain power within existing institutions and develop new models of social relations. Particular attention will be paid to issues of race, ethnicity, class, and sexuality.

WOMST 205 Gender, Ethnicity and Class

Section A: MWF 1:30--V. Carroll

Using a framework that examines how gender is shaped within the contexts of ethnicity and class, students will be introduced to multicultural feminisms through an active examination of history, literature and social science.

WOMST 380 Women and Global Change (cross listed with Non-Violence Studies)

Section A: TU 9:30—T. Dickinson

This course explores how women have used democratic participation in largely local grassroots groups and global networks to end gender injustices and other inequalities as an integral part of alternative development. Feminist social change is explored through an examination of books and articles on women in the world, including two women's novels about social issues in the global South (Latin America, Africa, and Asia and similar areas).
