Gender, Women, and Sexuality Studies Course Descriptions
Summer 2016

WOMST 105 Introduction to Women’s Studies Studies
Section A: MTWTF 8:00--G. Sabates
An introduction to the interdisciplinary field of feminist scholarship, which seeks to understand the creation and perpetuation of gender inequalities by examining historical, theoretical, and cross-cultural frameworks for the comparative study of women and gender. This course aims to sharpen students' critical awareness of how gender operates in institutional and cultural contexts and in their own lives. Particular attention will be paid to the intersections of race, ethnicity, class, gender, sexuality, age, national origin, disability, culture, and movements for social change.

WOMST 105 Introduction to Women’s Studies
Section ZA: Distance –Tushabe
This course explores social, political and legal issues important to women’s lives, women’s experiences and feminist movements worldwide. This course is interdisciplinary in its approach and has emphasis on both the social sciences and the humanities. We will follow closely the significance of gender and sex, and other social categories that organize our lives.

WOMST 500 Black Sexualities
Section ZA: Distance –Tushabe
This course investigates the intersection of race, gender, and sexuality. The course will explore complex relations among identity categories such as lesbian, gay, bisexuality, and transgender in relation to class, gender, ethnicity, religion, and nationality. The course will be divided into three central parts: the sexualization of race and the racialization of sexuality; socio-cultural perspectives on race and sexuality; and queering the Color Line and histories of oppression, including colonialism. We will read some of the most influential authors in Gender Theory, Queer Theory, Race Theory, Sexuality Studies, and Transgender studies.
