Guidance for Submitting Graduate Faculty Nominations

Requirements for Graduate Faculty nominations and criteria for review are outlined in Chapter 5 of the Graduate Handbook, available here: <https://www.k-state.edu/grad/student-success/graduate-handbook/chapter5.html>. Please be sure to review these requirements in detail.

Guidance and Tips for Nominations

1. Regular Membership, Graduate Council Approval Track. Typically, applicants must have earned a terminal degree and must have published at least one refereed paper within the last five years, but exceptions are allowed subject to the following (per Chapter 5):
 - If the CV does not explicitly include a peer-reviewed publication dated within the last five years, the nomination letter (and accompanying CV) should clearly identify the scholarly materials or outputs that represent significant comparable achievement in the nominee's field within the last five years, framed in a way that provides context to those who may be unfamiliar with the nominee's field.
 - If the department judges that work done more than five years prior to nomination is of sufficient significance, a request for an exception must be explicitly made in the nomination letter.
 - A nominee's dissertation is generally not considered comparable to a peer-reviewed publication.
 - Department graduate faculty may wish to waive the requirement of a terminal degree due to the faculty having an outstanding national reputation in their field. If so, the nomination letter must clearly convey the nominee's qualifications, and as noted above, should frame this justification in a way that provides context to those who may be unfamiliar with the nominees' field.

If a strong case cannot be made, the nominating department may discover that a Special Membership category is more appropriate.

2. Special Membership. The most common types of Special Membership nominations include those for Associate Membership and Clinical Membership. See the table below for key attributes of various special membership types. The nomination letter should provide a careful and explicit justification that clearly conveys the nominee's qualifications framed in a way that provides context to those who may be unfamiliar with the nominees' field.
