Students who apply to the student pass will have free access to hundreds of on-demand sessions when the conference kicks off in June. This is one of the best career/industry exploration tools since they will have full access to the industry conference, listen to company presentations, startup pitches, and educational sessions on new technologies and regulatory policy topics. There will also be a number of talks on innovation in therapeutics for COVID-19. Students in other disciplines who are interested in learning more about the biotechnology industry are also welcome to register.

BioKansas is also partnering with BIO to provide professional development programming before, during, and after the conference. They will have a pre-webinar session about the innovation pipeline and an on-demand session about how to successfully transition to a post-academic career that will be available to students who register.
