5/14/2018
GWSS 105 Introduction to Gender, Women, and Sexuality Studies
Section ZA: Distance – A. Towne
This course introduces students to concepts central to gender, women, and sexuality studies. We will draw upon multiple disciplinary perspectives in order to understand gender and sexuality on intrapersonal, biological, social, institutional, and international levels. We will look at how these aspects intersect with social formations, including race, nationality, sexual orientation, size, socioeconomic class, and ability. In this course, students will critically engage with theoretical arguments and respond to historical and contemporary issues.

GWSS 300 Studies of GWSS: Women & Globalization
Section ZB: Distance - - S Lewis
Contemporary economic and political globalization has transformed activities and relations across borders, leveling geographic divides and possibilities in an unprecedented way. But have the promises of increased integration, equality, and development been delivered for all involved?

GWSS 500ZA Top/Black Sexualities
Section ZA: Distance -- Tushabe
This course investigates the intersection of race, gender, and sexuality. The course will explore complex relations among identity categories such as lesbian, gay, bisexuality, and transgender in relation to class, gender, ethnicity, religion, and nationality. The course will be divided into three central parts: the sexualization of race and the racialization of sexuality; socio-cultural perspectives on race and sexuality; and queering the Color Line and histories of oppression, including colonialism. We will read some of the most influential authors in Gender Theory, Queer Theory, Race Theory, Sexuality Studies, and Transgender studies.
