Queer Studies Course Descriptions Fall 2018

GWSS 300 Top/Race, Gender, Medicine

Section A: MWF 1:30—H. Weaver

Science and technology are central to our lives. We connect through cell phones, email, and social media; use medicines that shape and save our lives, and engage in transactions at places like grocery stores and gyms where machines read our interactions and even our bodies. Further, science is a powerful basis for an argument; when "science says," people listen. However, science and technology are also cultural practices; histories such as eugenics are testaments to this. This class examines these histories and how they inform our present in thinking through the ways that science and technology shape and are shaped by race, gender, ability, sexuality, and empire. Our topics include the politics of knowledge; the invention of race in science; race, sexuality, and the environment; queer and transgender natures; race and biopolitics; feminist disability studies; Native American DNA; science and colonization; queer politics of medicine; the co-crafting of race and sexual difference; gender and laboratory animals; and more!
