Taking Care of You

By Denise Myers, MS, director of behavioral health services

Caring for your physical health is about paying attention to the functions, processes, and systems of your body. Caring for your behavioral health is about paying attention to your thoughts, feelings, and patterns of behaviors. When you take the time to care for both your physical and behavioral health, you support overall wellness to the fullest.

Much like how you might work with highly trained medical providers to help identify risks to your physical health, manage chronic conditions, and alleviate acute symptoms, you can work with highly trained behavioral health providers to help identify thoughts, feelings, and behaviors that put emotional and physical health at risk. A behavioral health provider can help manage and/or reduce symptoms of addictive behaviors, anger and hostility, low self-esteem, anxiety and depression, grief and bereavement, relationship issues, and many other emotional and behavioral conditions. Some examples of behavioral health providers are licensed clinical social workers, licensed professional counselors, licensed mental health counselors, and licensed chemical dependency counselors.

You and your behavioral health provider work as partners to understand and clarify your goals. Furthermore, your provider will give you the support you need to reach your goals by helping you identify the behaviors and habits that would be beneficial to your wellbeing to change. With your behavioral health provider as your guide, you can develop new, constructive ways of thinking that lead to behavior patterns that generate improved health and wellness.

Come by and get your “Ticket to Wellness.” We will schedule a free 30 minute visit with our behavioral health specialist. Learn about your mental health, behavioral health, and the impact on your overall sense of life satisfaction. Call or stop by today!
