K-State's next president, continued

March 4

Bobbi Hofer

Director of Undergraduate Admissions

The Kansas State University Foundation, grand gold in the fundraising videos category, "K-State at Salina," gold award in the poster, four or more colors, category, for "K-State at Salina: Imagine K-State," silver award in the student recruitment publication category, "K-State at Salina: Imagine K-State," bronze award in the electronic newsletter or magazine category, "Big 12 Recent Grad E-Solicitation," a bronze award in the alumni event category for the "Wabash CannonBall," a gold in the excellence in public relations and K-State at Salina, bronze award in the excellence in university publications and K-State at Salina, and a silver award in the student recruitment publication category for "K-State e-news" in the electronic newsletter or magazine category.

In it for the long haul, continued

Happy employees, continued

The immediate impact of stressful jobs and teaching responsibilities on professors can't be overstated. These pressures can affect professors' physical and psychological well-being, as well as job satisfaction and student performance. happy employees are more productive, spend less money on health care claims, and are more likely to stay in their jobs.

Mariana Turek, a faculty member in the Department of Psychology, recently completed a study that examined the well-being of professors during a one-year period. The study found that professors who reported higher levels of job satisfaction and lower levels of stress had better physical and psychological health outcomes over the course of the year. The study also found that professors who reported higher levels of support from their colleagues and department had better physical and psychological health outcomes over the course of the year.

Roberta O'Connell, a faculty member in the Department of Psychology, recently completed a study that examined the well-being of professors during a one-year period. The study found that professors who reported higher levels of job satisfaction and lower levels of stress had better physical and psychological health outcomes over the course of the year. The study also found that professors who reported higher levels of support from their colleagues and department had better physical and psychological health outcomes over the course of the year.

Cain Auditorium. Call 532-6428 for ticket information.

March 10

John McKeen

Provost's lecture series

March 11

Robert Shaw

Lawrence E. and Virginia K. Edwards Chair of Drama and Theatre Arts

March 11-13

K-State's big bands put on a show, 7:30 p.m., Forum Hall, K-State Student Union. Call 532-6040 for information.

March 12

Emily Jordan-Jacobson

Jazz combos perform. 7:30 p.m., Union Station, K-State Student Union. Call 532-6040 for information.

March 16-20

K-State's Jazz Combos will perform. 7:30 p.m., Union Station, K-State Student Union. Call 532-6040 for information.

March 20

Proctor's lecture series

March 21-27

Little Black Dress on the Plains show, 7:30 p.m., Forum Hall, K-State Student Union. For ticket information, call 532-6428.

March 26

Sarah Hara

Chair of the Kansas Board of Regents, during a meet and greet event Feb. 19. His term begins July 1.

Schulz's selection concludes a search which turned up an impressive array of candidates including several prominent industry leaders. "It definitely would be a difficult decision," Muller said. "Steve is an outstanding candidate and he has a lot of potential. But to make the selection, we have to select the best person for the job. We selected him because he is the best person for the job."

K-State, originally established as a Kansas State Agricultural College in 1863, became a land-grant institution in 1867. K-State's first president, John Evans, named the school "Kansas State College," but it was later renamed the "Kansas State University." The university has a long and storied history of producing leaders and innovators in a variety of fields. The university is home to more than 30,000 students from across the United States and beyond. K-State is a land-grant institution, which means it is committed to solving problems and improving lives in Kansas and beyond.

Landgraf, research experience a plus for former Mississippi State VP

Karl Landgraf, vice provost of academic affairs and interim vice president for enrollment management and student affairs at Mississippi State University, has been named president of Kansas State University in Manhattan, Kansas.

Schulz, who has been involved in higher education for more than 40 years, has served as the president of both the Association of American Universities and the Association of Public and Land-Grant Universities. He has also served as the chancellor of the University of Oklahoma and the chancellor of the University of Minnesota.

Landgraf’s selection was announced Friday by the Kansas State Board of Regents, which oversees the university. "It's been a difficult decision, but I believe Karl is the right person for the job," said Regent Tim Claudius, chair of the Kansas State Board of Regents. "He has a wealth of experience in higher education and has shown a strong commitment to Kansas State University.

Landgraf has been with Mississippi State University since 2005. Before that, he served as vice provost and associate vice president for enrollment management and student affairs at the University of Minnesota.

He is a native of Bismarck, North Dakota, and earned his bachelor's degree in political science from the University of South Dakota. He earned his master's degree in higher education administration from the University of Minnesota and his doctorate in higher education administration from the University of Nebraska.

Landgraf has served on the boards of several organizations, including the American Council on Education and the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators. He has also been a member of the board of directors of the National Association of Advisors for the College of Agriculture and the National Association of University Alumni.

He has been recognized for his work in higher education, including receiving the Presidential Early Career Award for Scientists and Engineers, one of the highest honors awarded by the federal government to early-career researchers.

Landgraf and his wife, Julie, have two children. They plan to move to Manhattan, Kansas, in the summer of 2015.
Don’t worry, be happy

K-State researcher says happy employees are productive employees

Our happiness might seem like such an unimportant thing, but it can actually have a big impact on your business. According to a recent study, happy employees are more productive, more likely to stay with the company, and more likely to recommend it to others. In fact, a company with a happy workforce can see a 37% increase in productivity.

So how can you ensure that your employees are happy? Here are a few tips:

1. Make sure your employees feel appreciated. Recognize their hard work and give them positive feedback.
2. Create a positive work environment. Make sure your office is clean and organized, and that your employees have the tools they need to do their job.
3. Make sure your employees have a say in their work. Give them the freedom to make decisions and try new things.
4. Make sure your employees have the right equipment. If they need a new computer or a better chair, make sure they have it.
5. Make sure your employees have a good work-life balance. Encourage them to take breaks and to spend time with their family.

By implementing these tips, you can create a happy and productive workforce. And that’s the best thing you can do for your business.

French films showing on campus in March

The Department of French Film Studies, appearing at the French Cultural Exchange at the University of K-State, has scheduled a series of films on March 26-27 and April 14-15. The series will feature French films of the 1960s and 1970s, as well as films from the 1980s and 1990s.

The Department of French Film Studies is a small group of professors who are dedicated to the study of French film. They have been working together for many years and have developed a strong sense of community. They are passionate about the films they show and are always willing to share their knowledge with others.

The French Film Studies program is open to all students, regardless of their major. They are always looking for new members, so if you’re interested, come on by and check them out.