

AMETH 300: Intercultural Competence

Dr. Yolanda Broyles-Gonzales

Distance

Informed by critical cultural studies, this course opens transformative discussion on the two concerns. Firstly, how media practices construct the representation, consumption, and politics of race and gender. Secondly, how race and gender meanings shape back to the media production, ethics, and laws. Situating multimodal media texts in the modality of inquiry, we will unpack critical perspectives of race, gender, and media across the intrapersonal, interpersonal, intergroup, and systemic contexts. The course will provide helpful resources for students and community members who are interested in interdisciplinary studies of communication; American ethnic studies; gender, sexuality, and queer studies; and rhetoric, media, and culture .
