

SOCIAL TRANSFORMATION STUDIES

in honor of Clarina Howard Nichols

Clarina Howard Nichols moved from Vermont to Kansas in 1855. Based in Wyandotte County, she worked professionally as a journalist, contributing articles on women's rights to the Lawrence Herald of Freedom and the Topeka Kansas Tribune. She also served tirelessly as a lobbyist and public intellectual, traveling through the Kansas Territory as a speaker for the Kansas Women's Rights Association. Largely due to her efforts, the Kansas State Constitution granted women equal rights to education, custody of their children, and voting on local school issues. After Kansas gained statehood, Nichols campaigned with Susan B. Anthony to gain full voting rights for women in the state. This scholarship for Social Transformation Studies majors recognizes the long history of activism in Kansas and supports the new generation of change-makers.
